The prologue to the swelling theme of the monopoly investigation has served at least one good purpose. It has helped to show what, at least some of the monopoly investigators have in their minds. Most important in this respect, though least helpful of the three performances, was the dissertation by Mr. Willard Thorp, from the Commerce Department.

Compensation Law Proposal for New Session Outlined

Constitutional Amendment, Just Approved, Is People's Mandate

COMPULSORY FOR 5

Would Pay 60% of Worker's Wages for Period of 400 Weeks

LITTLE ROCK. — The workmen's compensation law which may be enacted for Arkansas by the next legislature was discussed by Robert P. Hall, secretary of the Arkansas State Chamber of Commerce, at a dinner meeting of the Little Rock Bar Association at the University Club Thursday night.

Provisions of the proposed bill, being drafted by committee of the State Labor Department and the State Chamber of Commerce, were explained briefly by Mr. Hall, speaking in support of the bill from the viewpoint of a citizen interested in the development of the state.

Information from many sources was obtained by the committee, Mr. Hall said. He said the committee was open to suggestions.

Compulsory for Five Workers
As tentatively drawn, the bill provides the program shall be compulsory for all firms with five or more employees and elective on the part of the employer of less than five persons.

Excepted from the bill are agricultural labor, domestic servants and news boys, the latter because usually they are independent business carriers.

Administration of the law is vested in a three-member Workmen's Compensation Commission, to be appointed by the governor. Five referees to investigate and hold hearings over the state are provided in the administrative setup.

A member of the commission must be 30 years of age, a resident of the state for the three years before appointment; experienced as an employer, an employee. One member shall be an attorney with at least five years of practice.

Dissatisfied employees or employers may appear before the commission with legal counsel. An appeal to the courts may be taken from the commission's findings.

Schedule of Payments
Mr. Hall assured his listeners that an injured employee would be given the best medical treatment. In case of death a definite sum would be paid his beneficiary plus funeral expenses.

In case of death or total disability of an employee in line of duty, the beneficiary would receive for 400 weeks 60 per cent of the deceased's average weekly wage or an equal single payment. Tentative minimum and maximum under this provision have been fixed at $5 and $20 per week.

In case of injury a lump sum settlement could be made with approval of the Compensation Commission, Mr. Hall said.

The law would not provide compensation for employees who might be injured because of intoxication or who inflict wounds upon themselves.

Mr. Hall did not go into the details concerning the schedule of compensation payments set up for injuries for occupational diseases. That has been one of the major problems confronting the drafters, he said.

The act does not consider responsibility for the accident, negligence on the part of the employee or employer, but simply sets up a schedule of compensation regardless of liability.

It will be one of the few in the United States to include compensation for diseases contracted because of occupation, Mr. Hall said. The proposed act enumerates about 18 such diseases.

Assessment Plan
Costs of the proposed act will be met by a percentage assessment on insurance carriers' stock and mutuals, and on self-insurers, Mr. Hall said. He said the assessment plan was tentative and mentioned no amount.

Under the tentative plan, all revenue accruing will be placed in a special fund for use by the commission. The fund will bear administrative expense.

Lawyers who appear for clients would be allowed a fee of 25 per cent for the first $1,000 in compensation plus 10 per cent for all over $1,000.

Reviewing, briefly, previous attempts to enact a workmen's compensation law, Mr. Hall said labor for 10 or 15 years had been demanding a compensation law. An attempt was made to enact such a law in the 1937 legislature, but it was learned the constitution gave the legislature no authority to do so and the amendment was necessary.

Amendment No. 27 received more votes than any other proposal or any candidate in the last general election, Mr. Hall said. "Seventy-eight thousand people have asked that a compensation law be written and it is up to us to see that they get the best one possible."

He praised the service of the State Labor Department in compiling information and doing research into comparative compensation acts.

A Thought

In actual life every great enterprise begins with the takes its first forward step in faith.—Schlegel.

Mr. Thorp put chief emphasis on the fact that there is, outside the aluminum industry, no real monopoly in the United States. What he meant was that in no industry safe aluminum did any single corporation enjoy a complete monopoly.

Of course it was not necessary to have Mr. Thorp spend six months in research to tell us that. Even the Standard Oil of John D. Rockefeller in its heyday never had more than a 90 per cent control of the refining business, if that much. Every student of the subject knows that the problem of monopoly is not and seldom has been a problem of attack upon some single corporate giant. Monopoly as a problem has always meant the problem created by the combinations of a number of otherwise independent operators.

Few Complete Monopolies
Even in the case of monopoly by agreement we have had few cases of 100 per cent monopoly—that is, monopoly of every feature of the industry. There have been cases where very producer in the industry has been found in an agreement. No one will doubt this is monopoly. But usually the agreements have covered only certain features of the industry. Perhaps it has been limited to a division of territory, or to production quotas, or to prices or to patents or to other competitive functions. It was none the less a monopoly because it did not extend its monopoly effects to every phase of its activity.

Following this Mr. Thorp completely revealed his mind. He said the Sherman anti-trust law had been the chief cause of combinations in this country. Because independent industrialists could not get together and make monopolistic agreements under the law, they united into single corporations within the law.

Of course to say that has been the chief cause of combinations is to ignore the whole history of corporate development. There have been such cases. But it is incredible that a man who has studied economics in a first-class college can make so egregious a misstatement of history. The process of combination had proceeded to the most dangerous and destructive lengths before the anti-trust law was passed.

Law Is Great Help
Since that time the enormous advantages of combination in the corporate form for financing purposes, to evade all sorts of laws, to hide earnings, to exploit the public through stock issues, etc., was all the incentive to combination that was needed.

Mr. Thorp has been loaned to the government gratis by the Wall Street firm of Dun & Bradstreet. What he believes is that independent enterprises ought to be allowed to get together and make agreements without the hindrance of the anti-trust laws. That is what Mr. Thorp is working for and toward. He represents that group which will move heaven and earth to revive the old NRA agreements. He has a right to such views and to work for them. But he ought not to be "inside" the government working from within as a representative of the government.

National Champs at Willisville Dec. 14

Lewis & Norwood "Flyers" to Clash With Tupelo, Miss., Team

WILLISVILLE, Ark.—The Willisville wishes to invite all neighboring schools and friends to visit with them in their gymnasium next Wednesday night, December 14, 1938.

There will be a preliminary game between Willisville and Central boys at 6:45 o'clock as a curtain raiser to the big game at 8 o'clock.

The Central boys hold a number of victories this year. One of the victories including Prescott. The Willisville boys having a stronger team than usual makes the preliminary game a good one.

The Lewis and Norwood Flyers, 1937 national champions, will have as their opponents Tupelo, Miss., another strong girls' team.

The basketball season is getting underway and we feel that all basketball lovers would be glad to come out and see the national champions play. These two girls teams play the highest type basketball that one could expect to see.

The Lewis and Norwood Flyers include many ball players from neighboring cities, including Lema Martin. A local girl from Willisville, Hazel Walker, all-America, from Ashdown, and several others.

This will be the nearest place you will have a chance to see the national champions play. The admission will be 15 and 25 cents.

The legislation he will request will be broad in scope, he said, adding that he understood various members of congress planned to introduce bills.

To Increase Pension Rolls

WASHINGTON. — (P) — The Social Security advisory committee will recommend to congress and the president this week-end an early extension of the federal old-age insurance system at least 2,000,000 more workers.

It probably also will advocate beginning insurance payments January 1, 1939, instead of January 1, 1942.

Industry's Plan

NEW YORK. — (P) — The employment relations committee of the National Association of Manufacturers convention drafted for submission Friday a general program for use in working out jointly with the government and labor future changes in labor legislation.

The employment report, it was learned, stressed the following points:

1. Equal rights for both employer and employee, with due regard to the public interest.

2. The right of workers to self-organization and collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing.

3. The use of established rules of judicial procedure in settlement of disputes when legal action becomes necessary.

4. Labor legislation should observe the constitutional rights of free speech, rights of property, the right to work or not work, to the same extent that those rights are commonly enjoyed by other citizens.

Awarded $15 for Best Holiday Window—J. C. Penney Is Second

The Geo. W. Robison company Friday was awarded first place and the $15 cash award offered by The Star in a city-wide Christmas window decorating contest among Hope merchants.

The J. C. Penney company took second place and the $5 cash prize.

The Robison company scored 34 out of a possible 40 points for first-place winner. The J. C. Penney company scored 33 points out of a possible 40.

Other runner-ups were Ladies Specialty Shop and Duggar's store. They tied with 32 points each. Hope Furniture company scored 28½ points.

The judges, in no way connected with The Star, made a tour of the windows after the unveiling which took place at 7 o'clock Thursday night.

Judging was based on originality and display of merchandise.

Merchants competing in the contest are to be congratulated for their holiday window displays which drew praise from the judges as well as many spectators who visited the downtown area Thursday night.

Cotton Council to Ask $174 in County

¼-Million-Dollar Fund to Promote New Uses
for Cotton

The National Cotton Council has recently been organized to find new uses for cotton and cottonseed. It is not a government agency, but an organization of business men who realize that new uses must be found for the South's main crop.

These men are going to raise $250,000 for this purpose and Hempstead county's share of this amount is $174.32 or 1 cent for each bale raised in this county.

H. O. Kyler is chairman of the committee in this county. Other members of the committee are: Robert A. Campbell, Frank Nolen, Thomas Kinser and A. E. Slusser.

These men will call on producers, ginners, warehousemen, crushers and merchants in this county for a contribution to this fund and everyone who is interested in a fair price for cotton or cottonseed should contribute in proportion to his ability.

The money will be handled by the best business men in the country and every dollar will be carefully invested in the future prosperity of every person who benefits from the production of cotton.

Roy Anderson, Hope insurance man, was selected as general director of the Goodfellow Club at a meeting Thursday night at Hope city hall in which representatives were present from the Young Business Men's association and other organizations.

Mr. Anderson said Friday that he was studying a group of well-known Hope citizens to serve on committees to launch the campaign immediately.

The committees are expected to be announced possibly Saturday.

Mr. Anderson said that no quota has been set, but that substantial fund was needed to take care of needy children and families "in our own community" at Christmas time.

A total of $67.50 was contributed to the Goodfellow fund at the meeting Thursday night. Persons who wish to contribute to the fund may leave their donations at either Hope bank or at The Star office.

The names of those contributing will be published daily.

Divorce, Marriage Laws Leave Our Hero in a Statutory Spin

Connecticut Court Gives Hiram His First Surprise by Quashing Wife's Suit

This is the second of four stories in which a mythical character, Hiram, has difficulty with conflicting state laws.

By HARVEY WERTZ
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

Hiram, the legal guinea pig whose encounters with the law dramatize the pitfalls of the conflicting statutes of different states, now finds himself being sued by his own wife as a result of his latest accident.

But Dean Herbert F. Goodrich of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, creator of the mythical Hiram, explains that "public policy" was to come to his aid.

Hiram, a resident of Ohio, and Mrs. Hiram are touring. They have an automobile accident in Connecticut where the law provides a wife may sue her husband for damages.

Mrs. Hiram sues. "The Connecticut courts," Dean

Goodrich explains, "took the matter in their stride. To entertain such a suit would be against public policy," they ruled.

Legal Convenience
"Public policy" is a closed book to Hiram. Dean Goodrich tells Hiram: "A learned judge once defined public policy as 'an unruly horse to ride.' That is, it may mean one thing today and something else tomorrow."

It occurred to Hiram that a judge might conveniently use "public policy" for a reason if he couldn't think of anything else at the moment. Anyhow, it was clear to Hiram that Ohio residents motoring through Connecticut could not avail themselves of the Connecticut law merely to suit a situation.

Hiram's next adventure was shared with his son, Hiram, Jr., who took the family car from his home at Fostoria, Ohio, into Michigan where he met a girl, a lovely creature. They drove together into Illinois.

Fate caught them, seen them spinning into an accident. The girl was injured. Hiram, Jr., with father's car was legally responsible to the girl who was his guest. Democracy Means Voting On War or Peace

The next session of Congress will hear much of war and the rumors of war. It will presumably vote money for further expansion of the army and navy. It will speed up production of war planes. It will do other things to perfect the nation's military preparedness.

And it may, just possibly, get around to taking a vote on the Ludlow anti-war amendment which would make it impossible for the United States government to declare war—except in case of invasion of American soil—without first obtaining the approval of the people through a nation-wide referendum vote.

It ought to make a first-rate trailer to the preparedness omnibus. There cannot be any question that the people of the United States, support in a strong rearmament program, are thinking solely of self-defense. Events overseas have convinced even the blindest, by now, that this world of today is no place for an unarmed innocent. A great nation has great responsibilities, and responsibilities cannot be met nowadays unless there is force to back them.

But the American people, who are putting up enormous sums to make such force available, have a pretty clear notion what they intend to do with it. They don't propose to intervene in European wars or to fight for any but their own vital domestic interests. They want to stay at home and mind their own business, secure in the knowledge that no power on earth can interfere with them in that pursuit.

And passage of the Ludlow proposal would be an excellent means of insuring that their new armaments would be used for that purpose—and no other.

It is a little hard to take some of the arguments against this measure seriously. It is urged, for instance, that such a law would tie the hands of America's statesmen and rigidly restrict them in their conduct of foreign affairs. And that, to be sure, is true—and it's one of the big reasons why so many people think this is a good idea. If restricting the statesmen helps to keep the country out of war, so much the better.

Then there is the argument that the delicate matters of statecraft involved in a possible declaration of war are not things that the masses can properly decide on in a general election. Yet the very theory of democracy is that the people have the right to make their own decisions; and it is a trifle hard to think of any decision of greater consequence than the decision for war or peace. If the people are not competent to decide such an issue for themselves, what on earth are they competent to pass on?

America wants to be able to defend herself against anybody—but she also wants to keep out of war if it is humanly possible. Adding the Ludlow bill to the preparedness measures ought to be a good way of achieving both ends.

Vocational Guidance May Help Pupils' Physical and Mental Disturbances

If a student in college keeps relatively free from sickness, keeps up his work, sticks to his courses, gets along with the teachers and classmates and does not betray a serious quirk of behavior, he is considered to be normal college student. Many student vary in some of these particulars. Dr. Harry M. Flebont points out that these deviations should be looked for by any director of student health because the ymay carry them on to the point where they will ruin the life and the career of the person concerned.

Everyone knows that a healthy body is desirable for a healthy mind. Enough sleep, suitable diet, exercises and regular living help to make a healthful life. In most colleges there is at least a dispensary and a physician available for the minor illness and anything more may be referred to the family doctor.

Among the college students, as well as among the population generally, there are some people who are much more inclined to be ill than others. Then there are the hypochondriacs who seem to enjoy ill health or who find in the manifestation of ill health an escape from some of their problems.

College physicians regularly see boys and girls who have been frustrated in some of their activities, who are disturbed about love affairs, or who feel themselves out of place in their environment and who develop vague aches and pains related to the heart, the lungs or the stomach as a means of getting away from conditions which they cannot change.

There are other students who are who complain of inability to sleep and who tire easily, who are in such condition because of an unsatisfactory environmental situation. If they get into surroundings which suit them, they begin to eat and sleep better and as a result overcome the difficulties.

either in business or in science. Frequently the aid of an educator in selecting for the student a course suitable to his aptitude brings about a recovery from his physical and mental disturbance.

Faces Before Windows

Enger, childish faces, staring through the windows bright. Where Toyland's magic motion is a thrilling, wild delight: Satisfied mother faces gazing at the wonder toys. Wishing to provide somehow for her little girls and boys; Older faces spellbound, through a gloze of tears, Looking back with heartache to the long gone years. Plaintive newboy faces hungry for a look— Catching glimpses now and then of a treasured book: Happy boyish faces pull a father's hand, Sure, each one, his parents are richest in the land. A human stage of faces—all wearing different masks, In pantomime gestures—bound to various tasks. May the Christmas season—though mingled joy and pain Bring to each face the smile of happiness again—Selected.

The selection of the above poem was inspired by the many beautiful windows in our business section displayed to the public at 7 o'clock Thursday evening. The eager faces of the children, fathers and mothers and others looking back with heartache to the long gone years. The displays were splendid both in originality of ideas and arrangement of merchandise, and while Hope may not boast of experienced, trained window dressers, last evening's display proved there were real artists among them. "A human stage of faces, all wearing different masks" viewed the different windows surrounding the business block and adjacent streets, that were so beautifully lighted with the many glittering colored lights catching the spirit that gathers for a season, all men, rich and poor into one family—in spite of strife the sets nations asunder and wars and rumors of wars that never cease.

The Cosmopolitan club held a most interesting meeting on Thursday afternoon at the attractive home of Mrs. Nallon Wylie, North Hervey street with Mrs. Mack Stuart as joint hostess. Mrs. George Robinson program leader introduced Mrs. Harrel Hopson who discussed, "Making Places for Pictures and Camps in the Home." Mrs. D. D. Walbert discussed "Christmas Decorations in the Home." Following the program, the hostesses served delicious fruit cake with coffee.

Harry Steinberg, a former Hope boy, now among the writer's list of boys who have gone out into the world and made good and is now a resident of Dallas, Texas, spent a few hours visiting with friends in the city on Thursday, incidentally making a call on young Richard Broach.

The Alma Kyler Circle of the W. M. S. Methodist church held its December meeting at the home of Mrs. Curtis Urey. A covered dish luncheon was enjoyed at noon followed by the program. A most helpful devotional was given by Mrs. George Northcut. Mrs. Kyler told of the missionary work in Congo Africa. "Removing Racial Barriers" was discussed by Mrs. Joe Jones. During the business period, the following new officers were elected: Leader, Dr. Virginia Crow, assistant leader, Mrs. H. O. Kyler; secretary, Mrs. George Northcut; treasurer, Mrs. Joe Jones; chairman social relations, Mrs. Buck Powers; program chairman, Mrs. Byron Andrews; telephone chairman, Mrs. Joe Luster. Thirteen members, three visitors and four children were present.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist church will meet at the church Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. A meeting of the Executive Board will be held at 2:15.

In the meeting of the Paisley P. T. A. held at the Paisley school on Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Fred Cook reviewed the talk on "The More Abundant Life" made by Mrs. Evans of Arkadelphia before the study group on Tuesday afternoon. For the devotionist, Miss Bessie Green told a Christmas story. Mrs. Webb Laster, Jr., program chairman, reviewed the year work and outlined future plans. "Fundamentals in Caring For the Teeth," was discussed by Mrs. P. J. Holt. The president's message was read by Mrs. Clifford Franks.

Mr. and Mrs. Ched Hall, Mrs. J. R. Williams, Miss Edna Earl Hall and Mrs. A. T. Jewell were Thursday visitors in Little Rock.

The December meeting of Circle No. 4, W. M. S. Methodist church, Mrs. Glen Williams leader was held at the home of Mrs. O. A. Graves. The devotionist was given by Mrs. M. B. Bryant, and a most interesting Missionary quiz was conducted by Mrs. C. M. Agee. During the social hour, a tempting salad course was served to 12 members and one visitor.

Baptists Permit Board to Borrow

$100,000 Nurses' Home to Be Built at Little Rock

ARKADELPHIA, Ark.—(AP)—The Arkansas State Baptist convention Thursday voted unanimously to permit the church's hospital board to borrow $100,000 for a new nurses' home at its Little Rock institution.

Construction of the new unit would permit the placing of 135 additional beds in the Baptist hospital at the capital city when nurses vacate the fourth floor of the building where they are lodged now.

A ministers' retirement plan was adopted by the convention. It provides that clergymen may begin drawing annuities at the age of 65. The plan stipulates that three per cent of the pastors' salaries will be placed with three per cent furnished by the congregation and two per cent by the Southern Baptist convention into the retirement fund.

Dr. John R. Sompey, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., told the delegates in an address that the Sino-Japanese conflict was giving missionaries to the Orient greater opportunity to preach the gospel.

Dr. J. E. Dillard, secretary of the executive committee of the Southern Baptist convention, reported that the denomination's debt had been reduced from more than $6,000,000 to approximately $3,000,000.

Speakers on Thursday's program were the Rev. Edgar Williamson and R. A. Cook, Little Rock layman.

The 85th annual convention will close Friday noon with the naming of committee members and a memorial service. The assembly convened Tuesday.

3 Guernsey Teams Beaten by Patmos

Pirates Make Clean Sweep of Games—Boys Winning 31 to 23

PATMOS, Ark.—Taking an early lead and never relinquishing it, the towering Patmos Pirates defeated a smaller Guernsey basketball team here Tuesday night 31 to 23. The Pirates grabbed an early lead by taking the opening tip-off for a score and then hit two more baskets from the field in quick succession. Then the Pirates offense bogged down and the game settled down into a sluggish affair which created very little excitement.

The Pirates played far below par, and had they made all their shots good could have scored their entire total of points in the first half. Mayton looped 10 points to the scoring honors for the Pirates. Cox of Guernsey found an equal number.

This game places the Pirates in front in county league play with three wins and no losses.

The most thrilling game the Patmos girls defeated the Guernsey girls by a score of 28-21. Kent, Patmos forward was outstanding with 19 points. The passing of the Patmos forwards was the chief feature in this victory.

The final game found the Patmos Junior Pirates demonstrating great defensive form to defeat the Guernsey juniors by a score of 20-2. Cox charged in from the guard post to take scoring honors for the Pirates with 8 points.

These games mark the second consecutive defeat received by the Guernsey Blue Jays from the Patmos Pirates.

June 18 is "Arkansas Day" at World's Fair

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—State Publicity Director M. C. Blackburn Thursday said June 18 had been designated "Arkansas Day" at the New York World Fair.

The date commemorates Hernando DeSoto's crossing of the Mississippi into Arkansas June 18, 1541.

Fair Director Grover Whalen in a letter to Blackburn expressed the hope that "the Arkansas commission will immediately commence planning for the development of a program that will present Arkansas in such a fashion on that day as to direct the attention of the entire world in the direction of your beautiful state."

Huge Drug Firm in Financial Trouble

But McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Confines Loss to One Department

NEW YORK.—(AP)—The tangled affairs of McKesson & Robbins, Inc., described by a director as "so damned fantastic we still cannot believe them," were taken under New York federal court trusteeship Thursday, with the Securities and Exchange Commission as a party to the proceedings.

On the drug company's own petition, federal Judge John C. Knox appointed three trustees to direct the company's reorganization under the Chandler Act, which permits SEC participation.

An account of the "fantastic" circumstances which brought the $18,000,000 concern under the spotlight was given by two directors, W. L. Cummings and J. F. Thompson, in testimony before the New York Stock Exchange Committee on Stock List. They described operations of the company's crude drug department, in which falsification of books, mismanagement and waste were charged.

"It may be the whole thing (the drug trading department) is just a hollow balloon, just a shell," Cummings told the exchange authorities. "There may be nothing there. There is no involvement of any other part of the business."

The department's assets were carried in the balance sheet at $17,000,000. It was discovered, Thompson said, that some supposed "warehouses," from which were received monthly reports on outgoing and incoming inventory were "just plain mailing addresses."

"They're all on the most elaborate engraved letterheads," he continued, "these individual (drug trading) companies, which are reputed to have the merchandise. One of them is the office of a mimeograph operator, and things like that."

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of Advance

The Sin of Covetousness Text: Exodus 20:17; Luke 12:13-21;

1 Timothy 6:6-10

The tenth Commandment is against covetousness, and here, as in the former lesson, its teaching is emphasized in a story taken from the New Testament and in very wise homily by St. Paul in his letter to Timothy.

It would seem obvious, in a primitive society where the conditions affecting all were very much alike, that wherever a man sought to grab more than his fellows to get unusual advantage or when he became eager of possessing what others could not have the whole social structure would be very great weakened. If we could see our complex society with clear vision, we would understand that covetousness is just as deep and dead, it is the destroying force beneath much of our social inequalities and injustices.

Covetousness is a social sin, but it is equally a personal sin in its effect upon the man who practices it. It is a social sin because it may have serious results upon one's fellowmen. The man who has an inordinate desire for wealth, or for possessing what other men have, may create all manner of distress and social injustice by his covetousness. What he does not always see is that, even where he gains his ends, he blazes and destroys his own soul.

Covetousness may be the underlying motive of self-seeking, even when one would put it upon the plane of justice. This is illustrated in the story of the man who came to Jesus, asking Him to have his brother divide the inheritance with him. We do not know all the circumstances or details, but Jesus evidently sensed the fact that this man was poisoning his own life by some false sense of injustice or by some covetous spirit. So He said, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" It was in this connection that He particularly emphasized the sin of covetousness and the fact that a man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things that he possesses.

He proceeded then to tell the story of the successful farmer, the man who was going to pull down his barns and build greater and take his ease and enjoyment out of the things that he had built up over many years. The successful farmer was probably no better or no worse than many men in a similar circumstance, but he had left out of account the most important thing of all, namely, his life. Death made all his prosperity and the things he had stored up mean nothing to him. But even in death, if he had sought treasure in heaven, there would have been some satisfaction in his life and some real heritage of goodness.

Robert Jewell Member of Hendrix Debate Team

CONWAY, Ark.—Robert Jewell, son of Mrs. A. T. Jewell, who is a freshman at Hendrix college, is a member of the Hendrix debate squad that recently returned from a four-day trip, which included participation in the tournament held at Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss., December 2 and 3. Four teams made the trip, two under the direction of Professor Robert Capel, head of the speech department, and two under the direction of Dr. E. S. Wallace of the department of the social sciences.

At the Millsaps tournament the debaters, several of whom are doing their first college debating won 10 out of 19 debates. Mr. Jewell is a member of one of Professor Capel's teams which engaged in eight debates at Louisiana Polytechnic Institute, Ruston, La. Dr. Wallace's teams took part in debate at West Tennessee Teachers College, Memphis, and at the University of Mississippi, Oxford.

The question used was that which is being used by debaters throughout the country.

Resolved: That the United States should cease to use public funds for stimulating business.

THANKSGIVING DAY

Thanksgiving snaps such as this are easy with any camera. You can tell the whole story of Thanksgiving Day in pictures.

Thanksgiving Day dinner offers one of the year's best opportunities for a series of story-telling pictures. These pictures can be taken easily, with any kind of camera, and they will occupy a proud place in your snapshot album.

Most of the pictures will be indoor snapshots, and these are easy nowadays. All the equipment you need is two or three large photo bulbs and some inexpensive cardboard reflectors. Screw the photo bulbs into bridge lamps, attach an extension cord so the lamps can be moved about easily, load your camera with a fast panchromatic film of the super type—and you are all ready to fire away.

Don't limit the pictures to the dinner itself. There is much more to shoot. Start early. Get a picture of Mother with her basket, bringing in the Thanksgiving groceries or one of the store delivery boys bringing them in. Show the mixing of the Thanksgiving cake—and after it is baked, take a picture as the loaves

Wilson's Widow Completes Book

Life of War President Is Put in a New Light

By SIGRID ARNE
AP Feature Service Writer

WASHINGTON—For 18 years, the handsome widow of Woodrow Wilson has been a phantom-like figure in the capital. She lives on S Street in the redwood Georgian town house in which the President died. She goes out to see a few friends, but they know they shouldn't invite her unless the party is to be very small and very exclusive.

Occasionally Mrs. Wilson has appeared at a rally of Democratic women, wearing great, butterfly-like orchids, the kind President Wilson showered on her during their courtship. She has never, even by a simple "yes" or "no," revealed what the Wilsons, mister and missus, thought during the Wilsonian World War years in the White House. But she is breaking that 18 year silence. She has written a book.

More Than Enough

It was done all in long hand in her quiet study where a picture of Wilson looks down on her. She wrote so well that she turned in three times as much as the publishers could use. So Pulitzer-prize-winner Marquis James was called in to edit the copy.

Those in the know say the book will throw new light on several of Wilson's acts as President. The reminiscences will run in part in a magazine, and appear in book form in the early spring.

Not in modern times, at least, has a former First Lady written memoirs of her life as a President's wife.

What prompted the non-committal widow to come out of her retirement? Friends say she has been distressed several times over printed comments on her husband's administration. She feels as strongly today as she did 20 years ago about the ideal he expressed.

Several times since his death, in 1919, she has visited Europe, each time making a pilgrimage to the Geneva headquarters of the League of Nations for which Wilson fought a losing fight.

Only once in the intervening years has she ventured into the public galleries of the senate, and then there was a characteristic reason; the senate was debating the World Court. Before she left, old-time Democrats had wheedled her into an impromptu reception in Vice President Garner's office.

Mrs. Wilson hasn't changed much from the days when she appeared occasionally in public riding with her husband in his last, lingering illness. She is a large, erect woman, with hair almost white. In her face one reads few of her thoughts. There's a Queen Mary-ish air about her black clothes and her hats. She practically never appears without the orchids.

RAISING A FAMILY

Let Child Put Pride of Pence Into Selecting Gifts Himself

Every child, boy or girl, likes to put "self" into his Christmas presents. Not selfishness, but self. The things he gives must represent his own personality, choice and energy. Otherwise the things he gives to his friends or relations won't be real to him at all.

It has always been a mistake, I think, for parents who mistrust their youngsters' judgment, to buy, wrap and send gifts in their names. Grandma may say, "Thank you so much for the beautiful vase, James," and this is the first time James will know that he has given her a vase or anything else. He loses so much this way, and if all his gifts are bought and sent by proxy so to speak, he loses half the fun of Christmas.

One way, in purchasing the higher-priced present to be given in the child's name, is to take him (or her) along. Let him have some say-so in choosing. And let him write his own card and make up his own greetings.

The child of six or seven may be trusted with a small amount of money to go shopping. The amount depends, of course, on what you can afford to risk. A few pennies, a dime or any small change.

From this age on up, depending on circumstances, every child is capable of selecting modest gifts for his friends. A top for Matt, a bubble-pipe for Betty, a funny balloon for the baby. A cup for mother and an ash tray for daddy. It is excellent experience and still better fun. It sets a fellow up considerably to be able to pick and choose what he gives. And besides it is half of all Christmas thrill. Secrets are such an important item just now.

It is also a splendid idea to put still more "self" into the small red-wrapped packages to be presented. This can be done by allowing the children to earn their Christmas money. It is one thing to be handed a dime or a quarter or even a dollar, and another to shake the bank each day to see how the treasury is fattening up.

Maybe Tommy should sweep the pavement anyway, as it is part of his entertains at small teas and luncheons for a small group of friends who are so respectful of her wish for retirement that many even deny knowing her. Mostly they're old-time Democrats who surrounded her husband in office. For instance, she visited the Josephus Daniels in Mexico last year. She often spends an evening with RFC's Jesse Jones and Mrs. Jones. Reason: they all like bridge.

Mrs. Wilson never seems to expect any special attentions, she never stands on her dignity. On her chauffeur's days off, she walks over to the nearest bus line and drops her dime into the fare box.

daily chores. And perhaps Joan should wash the usual quota of dishes. But in December, it might be a brilliant idea to put up tasks on a commercial basis. Especially if we intend to fork over some loose change, anyway. It gives these young shoppers a feeling of importance if their gifts are not only self-chosen but self-earned.

Whatever you do, mother, try to approve the things they buy. If Tommy brings home a pair of magenta socks for his father, large enough for mail bags, or Joan shows you proudly the pair of earrings she bought for nine-year-old Dorris, I believe it worth all the fortune and diplomacy you possess. Don't laugh, for goodness sake. Take your sense of humor out and tie it in the dog house. To laugh at thoughtful and serious effort it to hurt pride beyond repair.

A Book a Day

By Bruce Catton

Kings Are Still Doing Business

If you think that royalty is dead you have only to spend a few hours with Seymour Berkson to be thoroughly disillusioned. Nearly half of the world is still run by the monarchies, Mr. Berkson asserts, some pretty shaky to be true, but still open for business. Collectively they make a singularly rare story, commingling pathos and humor.

This story Mr. Berkson tells in a book as interesting as the kings and ex-kings an dthe pretenders themselves, "Their Majesties" (Stackpole: $3). It covers e mail from tiny gambling-kept Monaco to the biggest show of the lot, the British Empire.

So you get a kaleidoscopic picture; of staid, puritanical Wilhelmiana in Holland spindle-legged Victor Emmanuel, standing aside for II Duca; Victorian Queen Mary with her 50 servants and no buzzer; the Kaiser still one of the world's wealthiest men; King Ibn Saud, the desert Napoleon; the razzle-dazzle of gold beds and oriental magnificence; the easy democracy of the three Scandinavian monarchs.

Mr. Berkson is not concerned especially with their cares of state. He portrays each as a human being and the result is a vivid story. He does predict, however, that some day the crown will rule Germany and Italy and the other dictators states again, for dictator ship, he says, is a fragile affair, depending solely on the strength of one man.

Meanwhile this royal merry-go-round continues for better, or for worse. There is scarcely a king that has not been the target of a shot or a bomb and only a few have been free to marry for love. -P.G.F.

Greenhorn Hunters Cruel to Moose

FAIRBANKS, Alaska. — (P) — Sam White, wildlife agent, reporting on wanton slaughter and "greenhorn hunters" leaving wounded game to suffer and die, reported finding three cow moose lying dead within 40 miles of Fairbanks and nine crippled caribou hobbling about, part of a herd subjected to a barrage of long-range rifle fire.

He said such barrages are not unlawful, but are extremely unreasonable and cruel.

Park's Big-Horned Sheep Are Vanishing

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK, Colo. — (P) — Disease and unfavorable conditions are killing off the few remaining big-horned sheep in Rocky Mountain National Park, says Chief Park Ranger J. Barton Herschler.

A count last year showed 145 big-horns; this year there are but 130. Officials are making a study of the herd to determine the exact causes of the decline.

Paul Harrison in Hollywood

Mrs. John Hay Whitney Unemployed; Horse Has Made Good in Films

HOLLYWOOD.—Short takes: Clark Gable, the Great Hunter, took Carole Lombard on a duck-hunting expedition. "At least, he did some shooting," she said. "Me? I'm just a — retriever!"

Freddie Bartholomew is becoming so Americanized in speech and viewpoint that his Aunt Cissie is importing a special British tutor to restore his accent and ways of thinking. "On his personal appearance tour, Bartholomew is telling a story about the Hollywood child who asked another moppet how he liked his new stepfather. "I like him fine!" said the second kid. "So did I," admitted the first. "You know, we had him last year."

And then there were a couple of little girls, also of Hollywood parentage, and one of them was bragging that she would be a flowergirl at her mother's wedding. "That's not so thrilling," snorted the other. "I've been promised that I can be a witness in mother's next divorce case."

William Powell not only is well again, but will return to the screen January 1 with a new Metro contract. So he and Myrna Loy will play in "The Return of the Thin Man" after all. . . . Joan Crawford took some much-ballyhooed skating lessons for her stardom in the "Ice Follies" picture. She has learned to walk down a few wooden steps, skate across the rink and go out a door.

Alphabet item from the Hollywood Reporter, a trade paper: "After a hectic battle with the NLBB regarding the SWG, the SP, and the IATSE, the MPPA, which represents UA, U, Col, Par, RKO, G-N, S-I and M-G-M, are now having difficulties interpreting the W & H act in conjunction with the SAG and the SDG, who are having troubles of their own with the AMG, AFL and the CIO. Meanwhile the MPTOA, the ITOA and the declining AMPAS report an upswing in BO due to the MPAYBE campaign."

Earl Carroll coined a famous boast when the stage entrance of his theater bore the inscription: "Through These Portals Pass the Most Beautiful Girls in the World." But La Coma, a local night club always jammed with stars, does better by changing "Girls" to "Guests" and putting the slogan over its front door.

Romance Department: Lucille Ball and Director Al Hall are waiting for their picture engagements to coincide so they can take a couple of weeks to get married. So are Marie Wilson and Director Nick Grinde. . . . Judith Barrett and Matt Fox, a Universal vice president, are going places. The friendship began when they happened to meet shortly after she was fired by Universal. He said, "Sny, I'm the guy who caused your option not to be taken up. Are you doing anything tonight?"

More tests have been made of the wealthy Mrs. John Hay Whitney for the role of Scarlett O'Hara. Several studios have considered her as screen material, but for one reason and another she never quite has reached a real role in a picture. Meanwhile her pet squirrel, Pearl, has appeared in "Nothing Sacred," and recently Mrs. Whitney rode her favorite horse in a test at 20th-Fox—and only the horse got a job.

Frank Whitbeck tells about a WPA worker who is shunned by all his bridge-playing friends. Whenever anyone leads a spade, this fellow leans on it.

Madeleine Carroll on Rye Bread

Only two people holding a joint card in the American Federation of Actors are the Siamese twins. . . . A new film of technical tricks will be "The Illusionist," with Charles Boyer materializing Madeleine Carroll out of a steaming chafing dish. . . . Jimmy Cagney, in "The Oklahoma Kid," is supposed to speak in an Indian tongue. Actually he merely says "How're you, Toots?" and a few things like that, in English, and the sound track is reversed so that it becomes gibberish.

Columbia's new aviation picture was called "Plane 4" until Universal announced a flicker titled "Plane 66." So "Plane 4" now is announced as "Plane 104," and the next move is up to Universal. . . . Director Al Green, until recently the president of the Hollywood Turf Club, has been assigned to direct a picture called "Ride a Crooked Mile." . . . Greatest change in a title is contemplated in RKO. Dissatisfied with "The Pure in Mind" for a current picture, the studio wants to call it "White Slaves!"

LOVERS AWEIGH

BY BETTY WALLACE
COPYRIGHT, 1938 NEA SERVICE, INC.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
JUDY ALCOIT—admiral's daughter. She faced a choice between two navy suitors.
DWIGHT CAMPBELL—ambitious lieutenant. He faced a choice between his wife and duty.
JACK HANLEY—flying sailor. He faced a test of his patient love.
MARVEL HASTINGS—Judy's wife. She faced the test of being a good sailor.

Yesterday, Judy feels guilty talking with Dwight in her car. Then another automobile approaches: it is Marvel's. Marvel leans out, says, "So this is what you're up to!"

CHAPTER XXIX

FOR a moment she could only stare at the girl behind the wheel of the other car. Marvel opened her door with slow deliberateness, then came and stood beside Judy's car, looking at Dwight and Judy with a burning directness.

Even in the darkness, Judy could see that Marvel's face was tired, that her hair was not as beautifully waved as usual. She looked as if she'd been driving a long time, as if she'd been crying, too.

"I went to the ship," Marvel said. "You weren't there. I went home. I saw you hadn't even been there since you got back. I called your house, Judy Alcott. I knew he'd be with you. I've been driving for hours. I felt, somehow, that I'd find you like this."

Judy's voice refused to function. But Dwight, after his first surprise, could only say, "I thought you were still on the yacht."

"The yacht!" Her lips twisted. "Do you think it was any fun, after what you'd said to me? And there's something else. Something I—I didn't know before."

Dwight said, "Marvel, don't jump at conclusions. We—I—Judy and I—"

"I suppose you were out here working out some problem in naval engineering?" Marvel said with fine scorn.

NOW Judy's voice returned. She said, "You mustn't get the wrong idea." Her face burned. She tried to explain, but anything she could say would be cheap and untrue, and so she closed her mouth and let Marvel's eyes flick her face. She didn't blame the other girl for being angry. But she wanted passionately for her to understand, and she knew she never would.

Then Marvel said, "I don't intend to stand out here and make a scene. Get in my car, Dwight. Drive to the house. Judy, follow us. I want to speak to you, too."

"Maybe I'd better go home—"

Marvel's eyes snapped. "No. You're not going to sneak out of this. You wouldn't want me to broadcast it over the station that I found you two together, would you? That wouldn't do you any good. Better follow us."

She got into her own car, and Dwight silently followed her. When he had started down the drive, Judy put her clutch in and shifted to first. What did Marvel want with her?

In a few minutes the strange procession stopped in the driveway of the white house. Marvel fumbled in her handbag for the key, handed it to Dwight.

Judy looked around the living room. The dust was thick on the glass tables, and curls of it rolled on the bare floors with their bold patterns. The blinds were drawn, there was a closed, choking airlessness about the house. As if no one had lived in it a long time. Since Marvel had left for Bremerton, it had been shut up.

JUDY sat down in one of the low, angled chairs. Marvel lit a cigarette. "Sit down, Dwight," she said.

Then she leaned forward, "We're going to get to the bottom of this thing. I'm not going to do any hysterical accusing, and Dwight, you can just swallow anything you want to say about Cary Tennent. I could have married him long before I ever saw you, and I didn't."

Judy thought, looking at her, that Marvel had never looked so weary. It was as if she were even too tired to put on her usual display of temper. She was simply hard, flint hard. She had a job to do, and she was doing it. For the first time Judy saw the determination of Marvel's jaw, and realized that the businesswoman who had millions had left his daughter more than money. He had left her an iron will.

Judy thought of Jack, in the white hospital room. What if he could know what was going on here. Jack, who was so happy, so steeped in contentment now that she had promised to marry him.

Marvel was saying, "Since I first came to California, Dwight, I knew that you had been carrying on with her. She knew that I knew it, because I told her. I tried to fight it. Maybe I lost. That's what I want to know. Are you going to marry her when I divorce you?"

Judy squirmed at the cold, matter-of-fact question. She cried quickly, "Please, Mrs. Campbell! You don't understand! I'm engaged to Jack Hanley. I—I don't love Dwight. Oh, you're wrong! You're wrong!" She pleaded for understanding, her eyes on Marvel's still face. "I'll admit when you first came I was hurt. I—I was foolish. I thought—I thought I cared for Dwight. But now I know better. Oh, I can't begin to tell you, it's all so plain now! There was never anything real between us. It was hard to let go the dream I'd had, don't you see? But that's all it was. A dream."

SUDDENLY, as she watched Marvel's face, from some deep well of intuition inside her, Judy knew that Marvel wasn't as cold as she tried to appear. She was suffering. Her eyes filled with pain, and her hand, holding the cigarette, trembled.

Judy was talking rapidly, trying desperately to explain the nebulous and only half-thought-out emotions which had swamped her. "Dwight didn't ever love me. Even now, he only wanted to see me because he was lonely and hurt. I felt sorry for him. Oh, I could see—I tell you, I could feel—how lost he was. He—he loved you, Mrs. Campbell. It wouldn't have hit him so hard if he didn't. That's the only reason he turned to me. He didn't talk about me—he poured out his woes, and spoke always of you!"

And now Judy was weeping softly, into a handkerchief she had hastily extracted from her bag. "This is too big to pretend about. I know the truth now. Jack Hanley is—he's wonderful, he's been so good to me. I've been a sneaking, sniffing little fool, keeping him waiting, not knowing my own mind." She raised her eyes, looked straight at Marvel. "I don't believe in this. Only you must believe me. I don't love your husband and he doesn't love me."

Marvel stood up. "Dwight!" she said. There was a sound, as if she sobbed once, and then Dwight's arms were around her. Judy averted her eyes. There was such gladness on Marvel's face, such a stunned, incredulous light in Dwight's eyes.

As Judy walked out of the room she heard Marvel saying, "Dwight, I—I wasn't going to tell you. But I came back, I had to come back, because we're going to have a baby."

--Get along Little Giftie

Mother used to have one fascinating bureau drawer. In it were numbers of scented tissue-wrapped parcels. Gifts. Not gifts she had selected. Gifts she had received — beribboned, ornate, useless. Mother kept them all year. At Christmas she got them out — and sent them to others. Once in a while the cards got mixed and mother and her friends bowed coldly to each other in great chagrin for some time afterwards.

Nowadays mother's bureau drawer is practically empty. The little doggies that changed hands every Christmas no longer pass along between mother and her cronies.

Advertising pages have given all of them a new view of what's new — wanted — usable in the way of Christmas presents. They report things that are fun to purchase — fun to give — and fun to get. Gifts that stay put — because people really want them. Gifts that actually cost less than the old-fashioned boomerang present. Why not consult the pages of this publication? See what's new — and wanted — this year by your friends too.
